Highlights

- The monthly return of the fund was -0.1% (YTD: 3.5%).
- The fund delivered a flat performance in December. Positive contributions from interest income and FX movements were offset by the results on FX contracts, lower equity valuations, and fund costs. The fund closed the year with a solid annual return, despite this year's global uncertainties, which reflects the fund's long-term stable and resilient financial performance.
- No new investments were made in December. The fund received EUR 11.0 million in repayments and disbursed EUR 3.9 million. Renewed debt was provided to SEF, a microfinance institution in South Africa that provides group-based loans primarily to women living in poor, rural communities, to Optima, a microfinance institution in El Salvador, and to Mi Banco in El Salvador, a cooperative bank that serves low and lower-middle income employees of government institutions through payroll deduction loans.
- The strengthening of the US dollar and protectionist policies under Trump-II may shift global trade dynamics, prompting emerging markets to focus more on regional self-reliance. Countries within trade blocs like BRICS could benefit from increased intra-bloc trade, reducing dependence on global supply chains and energy imports. For TMF, this creates opportunities in markets that are prioritizing domestic production and regional development. Looking ahead to 2025, we anticipate further reductions in policy rates from major central banks in advanced economies. This could support economic activity and benefit investments in emerging markets, which generally perform well when financing costs are lower.
